

When I was walking in Peñalolen the other day I saw lots of parking lots, even one in front of another, but... Why? Because of the amount of people that go there everyday? Or maybe another reason?

People who park their cars somewhere are trusting that place, leaving something very valuable there, maybe somewhere there isn't any security guard. But what if there is actually a security guard, are civilians trusting on them? Probably, yes, they are, maybe because security guards are approved by the municipality or by the people that own the parking lot.

At the end, parking lots in Peñalolen seem to be pretty safe, so it is OK to park our cars here.
